COURSE DESCRIPTION:

This is an advanced course designed to introduce students to practical and theoretical concerns in teaching literature. It is meant to help prospective teachers of English and Literature to develop the skills necessary to explain literary terms as well as to encourage text interpretations in practical terms. It will also address issues associated with teaching and interpreting literature, poetry, fiction, drama, and short story. The emphasis on a variety of approaches to teach literature takes into consideration different learning styles and the use of technology. The course is organized around 3 core themes: the purposes for teaching literature; the content for teaching literature; and pedagogical approaches for teaching literature. We will explore these topics by way of a variety of texts and world view points to engage students through real-life issues while promoting critical thinking skills and communicative competence.

The course is 100% T virtual based on UCR's platform METICS (Mediación Virtual-MV)

METHODOLOGY: The methodology is expected to be developed within a humanistic, constructivist, investigative, and participative educational environment grounded within an eclectic philosophy. The course is 100% virtual based on UCR's platform MEDIACION VIRTUAL.

THE STUDENTS' ROLE: Students are expected to negotiate meaning and interact with theory, peers, the professor and high school students in the target language while participating critically. They need to be engaged in synchronous and asynchronous activities in MV or other virtual environments that will foster one's linguistic, cultural, and critical thinking skills as deemed in cooperative language learning.

Students need to keep in mind the importance of: 1) completing each assignment on time; 2) looking up unfamiliar terminology in different documentary search engines before classes; 3) expressing and defending points of view (using previous knowledge on literature and literary criticism from courses IO5530 and IO5540 and theory studied); 4) doing research about specific topics related to course contents through traditional library resources and/or the Web; 5) group work must be balanced in responsibility and participation, 6) the latest version of the MLA or APA format is required for writing essays, reaction papers, reports and any other written assignments.

Finally, students are encouraged to co-monitor their learning. Therefore, it is necessary to communicate doubts in advanced.

THE PROFESSOR'S ROLE: the professor will take advantage of different theoretical principles from a variety of teaching philosophies to promote learning. Thus, s/he will create diverse learning opportunities to achieve the course's objectives. S/he will take the role of a facilitator in explaining theoretical concerns. In other words, s/he will be a co-creator in mutually constructing knowledge and experience, a team member, and a guide in the learning process. In doing so, s/he will take advantage of Mediación Virtual as a technological resource to provide materials and learning environments.

ACTIVITIES AND SKILLS TO BE DEVELOPED:

A variety of activities will be used to prepare students to teach literature in various contexts within the Costa Rican Education Curriculum, without overlooking the possibility of providing the tools for students to face international teaching contexts. Students will participate in virtual environments to discuss based related reading assignments, student reports, selection and creation of materials and lesson plans, and other practical activities. These activities will consider the inclusion of ethical aspects in literary studies, academic work, and teaching activities for and with adolescents of different backgrounds in the country. Students will be involved in some practice teaching and presentations throughout the term. Students will also obtain an understanding of the importance of ethics in literature in relation to plagiarism and applying MLA or APA citation principles throughout the different course tasks done in and out of class. The following activities will be part of the course:

- Summarizing points
- Expressing and defending opinions
- Giving a narrative
- Interpreting literary texts
- Using theoretical support to propose class activities and materials
- Asking for and giving examples/ideas/explanations
- Using new vocabulary to discuss a literary work as well as to explain them
- Researching about teaching techniques and approaches to literature
- Using internet, virtual environment and other technological resources to teach literature
- Using internet and virtual environments to participate in on line classes and to teach literature
- Devising and implementing lessons for adolescents

EVALUATION:

A. Summative Assessment:

ASSESSMENT COMPONENTS	PERCENTAGES
Five short quizzes (5% each)	25%
Guided synchronous (7%) and guided asynchronous (8%) participation in tasks.	15%
Two oral presentations (10% each)	20%
Teaching Project (two 90-minute lessons based on two different texts each) 10% each	20%
e-Portfolio	20%

Quizzes: they will evaluate the theoretical and practical understanding of contents taking into consideration the course objectives.

Guided tasks: on the day of each group's presentation, the responsible group has to post one corpus description of the chapters for the week and design an activity and materials and provide suggested answers applying corresponding theory to PPZ. Involvement in forums and/or virtual activities will be considered participation, which needs to be supported by studied material or any other reliable sources. Tasks presented late do not have any credit for a final score. Detailed rubrics will be provided. Asynchronous tasks: each student will be assigned a group to evaluate lesson 1 and lesson 2 from one member using the template provided. A recording of the evaluation showing the lesson and corresponding feedback needs to be posted in a forum. Each evaluation is worth 4 %. Using video is mandatory (make necessary adjustments to comply).

Oral presentations: In groups, students will present and analyze two assigned course contents by means of videos or in a virtual class. They need to do academic research of topics. The aspects to be evaluated are: 1) Accuracy, 2) Content, 3) Fluency 4) Linguistic ability and 5) Vocabulary. A presentation's rubric (see below) will be discussed within the two first weeks of classes.

Teaching project: individually or in pairs, students have to prepare two 90 minute-lesson plans using literature (A text selected by instructor and a text of their own selection respectively) to teach any of the MEP's content targets. They also need to prepare all the materials they will use as if the lesson plan were to be executed in a real synchronous or asynchronous class environment. Therefore, if possible, it is necessary to coordinate with the teacher the corresponding permission with the institution and teacher(s) in which the class will be held. An evaluation form with detailed description of the aspects to be evaluated will be discussed within the first two weeks of class.

E-portfolio: in groups students will keep and share a digital record of four to eight assigned strategies for teaching English literature (McCloskey et. al, 2018) using two selected texts analyzed in the course IO-5011, with its corresponding corrections generated from peers' and teacher's feedback. So, this digital portfolio should contain at least videos, corrected assignments, feedback, materials, texts or other digital material used. An evaluation form with detailed description of the aspects to be evaluated will be discussed within the first two weeks of classes.

B. Formative Assessment:

- After each presentation and content studied, students will peer and self-evaluate their

- understanding with an instrument the teacher will provide.
- Constant questions will be made available in forums as a strategy to keep a record of students' understanding of contents.
 - Peer and group feedback forms will be encouraged among students while expressing and defending points of view.
